Mall blast probed again

Was it gas or bomb that wrecked Glorietta 2?

ONE MORE TIME: What caused the explosion that ripped through the Glorietta 2 mall on Oct. 19, 2007?

Justice Secretary Leila de Lima has ordered a new investigation of the explosion that killed 11 people and injured more than 100 others, following the claim of a retired colonel that it was caused by an improvised high explosive and not a buildup of methane gas, as was the conclusion of authorities at the time.

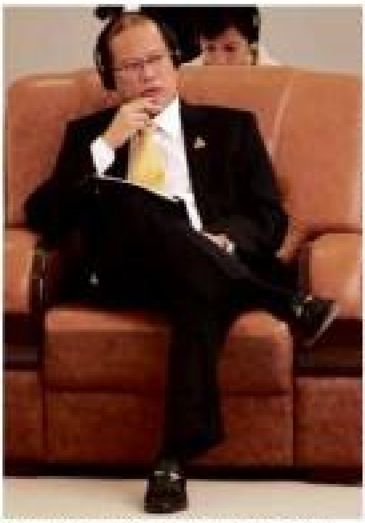

In Department Order No. 710 that she issued on Oct. 28, De Lima instructed Senior State Prosecutor Peter Ong and State Prosecutor Gino Paolo Santiago "to conduct a fact-finding investigation/validation of facts on the cause of the explosion" at the upscale mall in Makati City.

The prosecutors are to "review reports of investigation agencies made relative to the blast, assess and evaluate existing evidence, gather more evidence, and take additional statements of witnesses as may be available."

They have 45 days from the receipt of the order to submit their report and recommendation.

De Lima: Bar explosion well planned

The unidentified female government worker from Naic, Cavite, won Thursday night's 6/49 Super Lotto jackpot of P112,513,865.60.

The single lady claimed her prize on Thursday afternoon, the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office (PCSO) said.

"She has been betting on the six-number winning combination for more than 10 years. [illegible]," PCSO assistant general manager Lina Gabaya said.

The 20-year-old dentistry student said the book, "Tragic Theater" by Filipino horror novelist G.M. Coronel, had conjured spine-chilling images of anguished souls and evil demons in his head.

Not that it was the first time for Villanueva to be spooked by books of this genre. After all he is a fan of horror novels and anthologies which, he says, form part of his "pleasure reading."

Breast cancer program gets ₱50M for medicine

By Jocelyn R. Uy

POOR WOMEN vulnerable to breast cancer will just have to conquer their fear and consult with their doctors. As a reward, they will get their treatment and other medications for free.

Culminating the observance of Breast Cancer Awareness Month, the Department of Health and the Philippine Cancer Society Inc. (PCSI) yesterday formally announced that it was allotting ₱50 million for the medicine access program in a bid to improve breast cancer survival rates in the country.

According to program director Dr. Robert Lorejo-So, the program shall be rolled out initially in four sentinel hospitals in Metro Manila and Rizal province through a patient navigation scheme targeting indigent Filipino women diagnosed with early stage breast cancer.

The health agency has primarily targeted 750 early stage breast cancer patients from the four pilot hospitals to benefit from the program. The free medicines, including chemotherapy, are expected to be available by December, said So.

Free medicines

He stressed that the free medicines will be provided only to patients diagnosed with breast cancer stages I, IIa, IIb and IIIa.

"Patients when detected early has the best survival rates so we want to make sure that we give hope to our Filipino women," he said during the signing of the memorandum of agreement yesterday.

The four hospitals were identified as East Avenue Medical Center, Jose Reyes Memorial Medical Center, the Philippine General Hospital in Metro Manila and the Rizal Medical Center in Rizal province.

They were chosen as pilot hospitals because they covered the "catchment" areas of the Metro Manila and Rizal cancer registries—the main source of data for cancer incidence in the country, explained So, also the program director.

But once the registries have been set up in other state-run hospitals in the Visayas and Mindanao region by early next year, the program will also provide free medicines and other diagnostics to breast cancer patients from these regions, added Dr. Eleuterio Pumaloa, health assistant secretary for special concerns.

"We have to start somewhere and this is the starting point but we will spread out the program eventually to other areas," Pumaloa told reporters in a press briefing following the signing of the agreement.

Early consultation

Pumaloa also added that the ₱50-million seed capital was earmarked from the budget of the DOH's National Center for Pharmaceutical Access and Management.

Health officials said the program was one way of letting Filipino women develop the habit of seeking early consultation when they find suspicious lumps and observe early warnings of breast cancer.

"We want them to consult doctors early and if diagnosed to have early stage breast cancer, the perk or the benefit is that they will get medicines for free," said So.

Based on the 2010 Philippine Cancer Facts and Estimates, three out of every 100 Filipino women would likely develop breast cancer in their lifetime and that one out of 100 would likely die from the disease before the age 75.

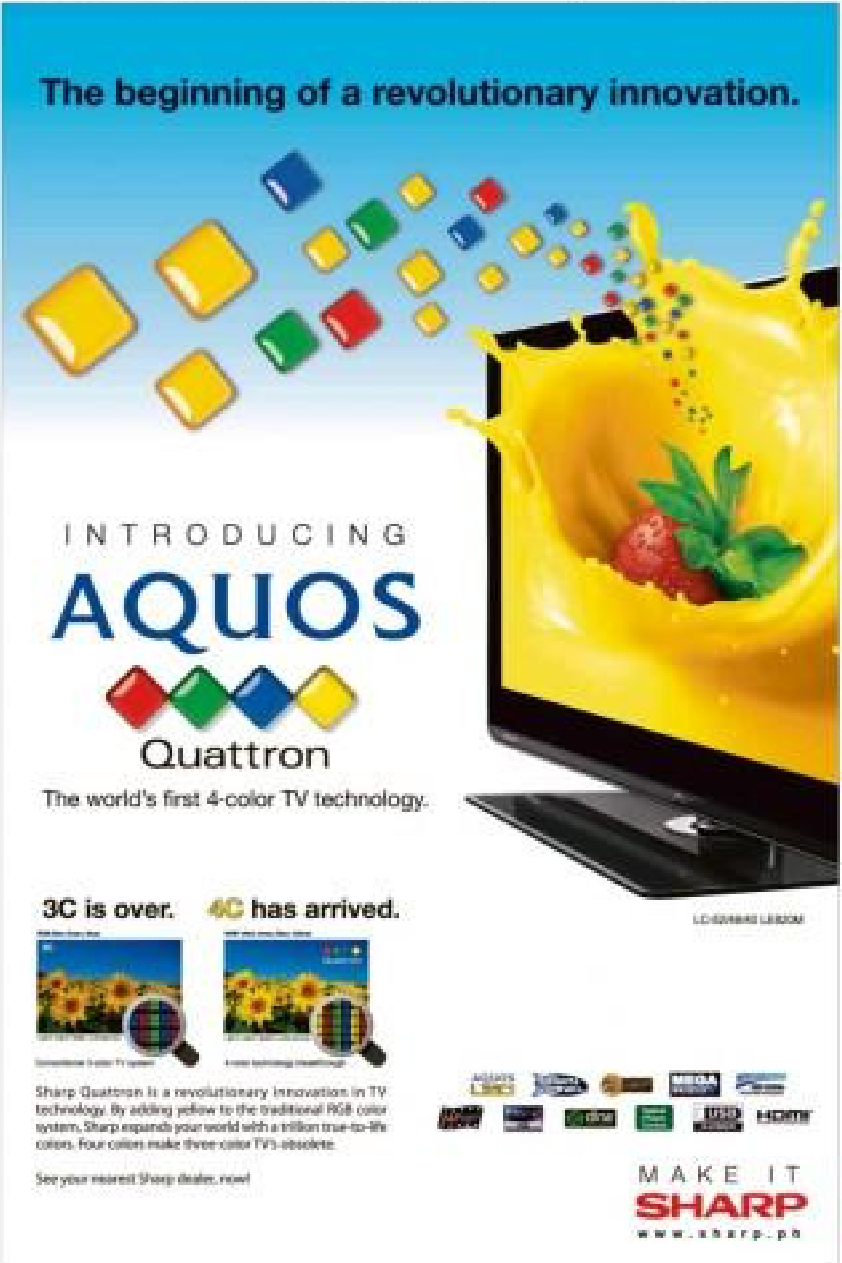

Records also showed that breast cancer was still the leading cancer among Filipinos, overtaking lung cancer. It remains to be the number one cause of cancer morbidity and mortality among Filipino women, accounting for almost 16 percent of all female malignancies.

At least 12,262 new breast cancer cases have been reported this year with 4,371 deaths.

So said most women diagnosed with late stage breast cancer postponed consulting with their doctors out of fear of death, isolation, disfigurement, high cost of medication and lack of access to appropriate care.

Strengthen efforts

"We are very much elated with this new partnership with the DOH to strengthen efforts to help women with breast cancer by providing them support and free medicines," said Dr. Rachel Marie Rosario, PCSI executive director.

SMDC condo rides the 'green' theme on Edsa

By Tessa R. Salazar

FOR NOW, let's forget the word "overdevelopment" and see how the fastest-selling and literally most traffic-stopping retailer-turned-developer has been rearranging the metropolis with its residential enclaves.

Could anyone else have imagined that a two-hectare, three-tower, 42-story residential and commercial development could have stood beside an impossibly congested Edsa-Shaw MRT Station, and still appear "green"? Only the SM could have imagined it, and made it real, and call it Light Residences.

When Henry Sy Jr. unveiled the showroom of the Light Residences that Oct. 20 night on Edsa in Mandaluyong, everyone was mesmerized at the speed and vision of SM Development Corp. for the project was unmatched, even, for them to even ponder on the towers' "green" design.

Harnessing sun, wind, water

Albert Yu, president of Arys Designs and the Light Residences architect, told Inquirer Property that SMDC projects have been about green architecture.

"This is the reason our development project is near the MRT, to lessen the burning of fuel. Every unit buyer is encouraged to save energy to lessen their carbon footprint. The supermarket and the cinemas are all just an elevator away."

Yu, who claimed to be among the founders of the Green Architecture movement and a US Green Council member, said the building harnesses everything the planet gives for free.

"We harvest the rain to flush the toilet, water the plants, wash the floor. We make use of the air and the sun for natural ventilation and light."

He added: "We owe everything to our next generation. We have to help Mother Earth, otherwise nothing will be left for our children."

SMDC B2-1

LIGHT Residences offers units ranging from regular Studio (28 sq m), one-bedroom units (22 sq m and 27 sq m—with balcony), two-bedroom unit (43 sq m) or a combined unit for bigger space (combination of two 1-bedroom units—58.84 sq m).

Makeup trick or treat

Create your own Halloween look with this simple beauty how-to

Makeup trick or treat

By [illegible]

YOUR COSTUME is the season's prerequisite. Costume parties and themed balls abound, and there aren't enough Wonder Woman and Snow White costumes to go around. The chances of ending up in the venue with a Lady Gaga twin are at an all-time high as well. How to stand out in a sea of masks and mass-produced attires? Whip something up yourself.

You don't have to be a pro to create your own Halloween look, says makeup artist Marj Sia. "You can do your own makeup. All you have to do is blend colors, use your creativity and imagination."

Marj herself didn't have any formal training and was doing makeup for her friends and prospective clients around for work. "I started with the basic [illegible] brush set from [illegible] and makeup prod from Maybelline and [illegible]," she said.

Needless to say, she made this Halloween how-to a breeze to follow.

That 'forever' style

By Luis Carlo San Juan

When you walk into Forever 21 at Megamall, you feel like a kid entering a very huge candy shop, only this time, you're grown up and have become style-conscious, if not style-driven.

Forever 21 is a huge conglomerate of clothes, dresses, shoes and accessories. With its opening, shopping in Metro Manila has become more exciting.

This American brand is one of the fastest growing and most successful apparel lines, a source of the latest fashion trends at a good value.

One can find colorful, vibrant basics and neutral closet staples, as well as fun, flirty resort wear, and sporty, athletic pieces.

Inspired by the runway-off-duty look from the fashion weeks of Milan, New York and Paris, one can easily look very street chic.

Forever 21 is on the 2nd level of SM Megamall A.

Super needs the 25-year-olds!

TO CELEBRATE the Inquirer's 25th anniversary, Super will honor the 25-year-olds who are doing something extraordinary in their own fields.

Whether you're doing something that nobody your age has done, or you're volunteering for a great cause and using your talent for the good of others—you're in.

We want individuals from various fields: the arts, music, business/entrepreneurship, sports, entertainment, service industry, the military or police, government, or the academe. And we want to hear from all corners of the country!

So what are you waiting for? If you think you're eligible (be ready with your birth certificate), or if you know someone who is, email us a nomination to TheSuper25@gmail.com telling us exactly why you should be part of our list.
